

Top Safety Accreditation for Husbands

Birmingham lift company Husbands has received an accreditation which recognises very high standards of health and safety practice among UK contractors.

The accreditation was awarded by SAFEcontractor which is operated by international safety, health and environmental risk management specialists, the National Britannia Group.

Husbands is one of the UK's leading providers of food service, document and passenger lifts and disabled platforms and is based in Shelah Road, Halesowen. It received the accreditation for its track record for safe practice and following a comprehensive vetting process looking at its health and safety procedures.

Husbands' owner and managing director Keith Holmes says he is delighted to have achieved the high standards in health and safety, which is part of a universal drive to push contractor standards up across the country. He comments:

"It is good for our staff and customers that our commitment to health and safety has been publicly recognised in this way. We will now go onto a database of accredited contractors, which enables organisations to vet potential contractors before they set foot on site."

James Ostler, managing director of Information Service at National Britannia adds:

“Major organisations can no longer run the risk of employing contractors who are not able to prove that they have sound health and safety policies. More companies need to understand the importance of adopting good risk management.”

The SAFEcontractor scheme covers services including building, cleaning, maintenance, refurbishment, electrical and mechanical work.
